

Access to the public spectrum should always be on a level playing field with greater hardships levied on those interests that already have their views franchised. That is to say the technically qualified person / group, should only have to compete with like applicant. First time, second time and or the already syndicated applicant.

Radio free Europe was created because of unfair advantage. I do not believe the Federal Communication Commission represents any special interest group and has the charge to further fair public distribution of the spectrum that offers public access to the lawful distribution of diversity in public opinion.

Thanks for keeping America in check with freedom.

Sincerely

George Sullivan
